

ARCHDIOCESE OF BALTIMORE PRIVACY COMMITMENT TO YOU

Your trust and confidence in the Archdiocese of Baltimore to protect your privacy is very important.

In today's information age, the Archdiocese of Baltimore takes actions to ensure your trust and understanding of how we use personal data we collect. We commit to keep information about you private and secure. To do so, we use and maintain physical, electronic and procedural safeguards.

Non-public information we collect about you comes from sources such as archdiocesan parishes, schools and affiliated agencies and organizations. Rest assured we do not sell any non-public information you have shared with us.

- We do not disclose any non-public personal information about you to any person or organization not affiliated with the Archdiocese of Baltimore, except as required by law for the normal operation of our business.
- We restrict access to non-public information to only those employees of the Archdiocese of Baltimore who require access in order to provide services that you have come to expect.
- We do not disclose any public information (name and address) to companies or other non-affiliated religious organizations.

It is our commitment to maintain your trust and confidence. It is our job to deliver on that commitment.
